certainly not by reason of any sad experience that the Chiucas have been led to expect corruption in the officers of the English Government in Hongkong. They are prepared for this manifestly becomes their own experience at home teaches them what to expect from men in an official position. Russin has been called a despotism tempered by epigrams, and China, from all the evidence one is abla to gether, might well be described as a despotism tempered by bribes. As much by the measures which are here and there taken to defeat the possibility of bribery, as by definite cases which may come to the surface, one is shown what the oustom of the country really is. We have seen some stories about the way in which the mon who conduct the provincial examinations throughout the Empire are sent away from Pekin, with extraordinary procautions designed to prevent thom from having intercourse with anyone in the districts to which they are sent, till after the examinations are over. Imagine Oxford examiners being subjected to regulations designed to make it impossible for them to receive a doucour for conferring a degree upon students able to pay handsomely for the bonour! In the more complicated affairs of government, however, regulations which may micreed in keeping examinors but of the way. of bribes, would be impracticable. The result which no doubt ensues, is that the bribery goes forward without let or hindrance. The iopulation becomes used to it, and re-sarde the system as a necessary part of Government. Do they thereupon become enraged, as Englishmen would be, if they found themselves subjected to the rule of a man capatite. of theft? If not, are they absolutely without the sense of justice, which would make it impossible for most Europeans to endure out into rebellion? These questions bring any rate cament exist widely in the Asiatic to mind at all. That is a gross and pulpable form of injustice, visible to the most obtuse European, but it is either invisible, or · looked upon as an evil to inevitable that it is not worth getting enraged about, to a Chineso. Not by any definite measure is it possible to make war upon this peatilent bellef in universal depravity by which our Chinese fellow subjects are evidently infected. All that can be done by the English Government of this colony is to try. by every means to promote the growth amongst the native residents of this island of that sixth sense,the sense of juritice,-whereof we molie the other day. Russia has iems been called a despatism tampered by epigrams, and Chine, from all the evidence one is ablo to gather, might well be described as a despotism tempered by bribes. As much by the measures which are here and there taken to Edul- defeat the possibility of bribory, as by definite cases which may come to the surface, one is co, shown what the custom of the country really is. We have seen some stories about the Ynut- way in which the men who conduct the pro-Van. sincial examinations throughout the Empiro are sent away from Pekin, with extraordiong to nary precautions designed to premnt them from having intercourse with anyone in the on to districts to which they are sent, till after the examinations are over. Imagine Oxford exg-tai- numiners being subjected to regulations designed to make it impossible for them to receive a douceur for conferring a degree upon students able to pay handsomely for the bonour! In the more complicated affairs of government, however, regulations which may succeed in keeping examiners out of the way of bribes, would be impracticable. The reand mult which un doubt ensues, is that the bribory goes forward without let or hindraned. The you to whole population becomes used to it, and reto Uni- vernment.

fied. To some extent, no doubt, this natural cent. proponsity of the Chinese mind has been bean fostered by the occurrences of a past time in gards the system as a necessary part of Go-Do they thereupon become enraged, as to Syd. Englishmen would be, if they found themselves subjected to the rule of a man capable on and of theft? If nut, are they absolutely without nd back the source of justice, which would make it impossible for most Europeans to endura on and existence on those terms without breaking out into rebellion? These oucations bring Chiabac oue full upon some of the greatest metaphy-Shang- sical maxies arising out of a study of the Chinese character. The sense of justice at any rate cannot exist widely in the Asiatic pos to mind at all. In truth it is by no means fully developed throughout the European mind, pos to as manifold decisions in courts of police and justice continually prove, but in a man who pea to can contentedly see crime connived at and keng at protected by virtue of payment made to an official, the sense of justice must be down, or chang atterly unborn. That is a gross and palpahile form of injustice visible to the most obtuse European, but it is either invisible, or looked upon as an evil so inevitable that it is not worth getting enraged about, to a Chinese. Not by any definite measure is it possible to make war upon this pestilent belief in universal depravity by which our Chinete fellow subjects are evidently infected. All that any be done by the English Government of this colony is to try by overy means to fromote the growth amongst the native residents of this island of that wirth sense. the sense of justice,-whereof we spoke the other day. That can only be done hy holding out continually before their the spectacle of Government offices, of law courts, and police courts, where perfect and finished ustice is continually dispensed. No decision. however trifling, before any organised tribanal, however limited its jurisdiction, is a matter of small conscouence. These things sales, are no doubt watched closely, -their proceed. lings, indeed, are no doubt scrutinised in-Shang- tently by all the Chinese inhabitants of the Bom- colony. Whenever an unjust decision is given, even though it may be given through no worse motive than a bigotted prepossession in farour of particular theories or crochets, that is indisputably a soul of evil, calculated to bring forth such fruit, ultimately, as the letter which was read the other day in the Police-court.
